A search has been launched to establish who owns one of Scotland's most famous bridges. The Craigellachie Bridge in Speyside was built by Thomas Telford around 200 years ago.

The 150ft iron bridge stands over the River Spey. It had often been assumed the bridge was owned by the local council in Moray, who currently look after the bridge. However, the local authority has confirmed it does not actually own the bridge. The Friends of Craigellachie Bridge group now aims to investigate and find out who the owners are.

Belfast plane lands without nose gear

A Belfast passenger plane has landed without nose gear after it experienced technical issues and circled for an hour above the Irish Sea.

Fifty-three passengers and four crew members were on board the Flybe flight BE331 from Belfast City Airport to Inverness, which had to be diverted.

It eventually landed safely at Belfast International Airport at about 13:30 GMT.

The airline said one passenger was taken to hospital with a minor injury but no-one else was hurt.

The pilots have been praised by the British Airline Pilots' Association (BALPA).

"Landing without a nose gear is a very difficult manoeuvre, but one pilots train extensively for," BALPA commented.

The Flybe pilots "appear to have done a sterling job".

What do you think of John Lewis' Christmas Moz?

A giant monster called Moz has the starring role in this year's John Lewis Christmas advert and has divided people's opinions. The advert from the high street store tells the story of a little boy and his friendship with an imaginary monster living under his bed.

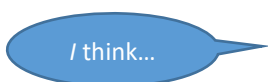

It features a cover of The Beatles song Golden Slumbers by Elbow. Viewers shared their thoughts on Twitter: "So ready to cry," said one. "Lost their magic touch," said another.
